

Another Day

Stand still,
Feel the wind move past you,
Watch the gnats make space.
Look behind:
There's the long-trodden road;
The grass comes back to life.

Pill bugs burrow new tunnels,
Birds fill brambles with new nests—
Listen!—
As if their song was never really gone.

Puddles of light on the ground shapeshift
And you miss the crackling fire,
The wool underneath your feet,
But most of all,
The smell of cinnamon...
Winter storms swapped for spring showers,
Yet you're thankful you stayed.

Go to bed,
Rest your heavy head
On a pillow from which flowers bloom.
Their sweetness billows
Through your dreams
Til you wake to another day,
Another day.

It comes and comes
(You never really notice)
Until cities and
Buildings and Kitchens and Sofas and Perfumes and Hands and Eyes and Laughs
Feel like home again.

You're still here—
Albeit, new—
And you're thankful you stayed.
